

 SADDLEBACK
EDUCATIONAL PUBLISHING

Saddleback's
Illustrated Classics™

A Christmas Carol

CHARLES DICKENS

Charles Dickens

Charles Dickens, perhaps the most popular and greatest English novelist of all time, was born in 1812, the son of a clerk in the Navy-Pay office. Although from a poor background and forced to go to work at the age of 10, he was still both ambitious and industrious. His education came on his own through books—those in school as well as his own.

Dickens wrote of people as he saw them, and because of his concern for social conditions in England, created some of the most memorable, timeless characters in literature. At 31 years old, in order to pay some pressing debts, he wrote A Christmas Carol, a wonderful, intriguing, joyful mystery about the spirit of Christmas, and without question one of the most widely read classics of all time. The particular characters Dickens created for this story...Scrooge, Bob Cratchit, Tiny Tim, and the Ghosts of Christmas...will always remain indelibly etched in literature.

The turning point in his life came at the time of his marriage. Both his wedding day and his first publication occurred in the same year. Some of his other timeless stories such as Bleak House, Oliver Twist, and Great Expectations were immensely popular in Victorian England, however, it is said that A Christmas Carol is his finest accomplishment.

Dickens, surely one of the greatest storytellers and creators of memorable characters, died in 1870.

Charles Dickens

A Christmas Carol

Fred

Ebenezer Scrooge

The Ghost of Jacob Marley

Tiny Tim &
Bob Cratchit

I am the Spirit of
CHRISTMAS PAST!
I show what has been.

I am the Spirit of
CHRISTMAS PRESENT!
I show what is now.

I am the Spirit of
CHRISTMAS FUTURE!
I show what could be.

Ebenezer Scrooge and Jacob Marley had been business partners for years. However, when our story opens on this cold Christmas Eve in eighteenth-century London, Jacob Marley had been dead for the last seven. Since money had always been the most important thing in the world to them, the sign outside the office still read Scrooge and Marley. It would have cost Scrooge money to have Marley's name painted out!

In the story, the ghost of Scrooge's dead partner, Jacob Marley visits him. Marley's ghost promises Scrooge that, for his own good, he will have three other ghostly visitors. They help Scrooge to see what he has become: a man without love or friends. But most important of all, Scrooge is left with the chance to change his future.

Although the hour was late, Scrooge and his clerk, Bob Cratchit, were still at work in the chilly, dark office. Outside, people rushed by on last-minute Christmas errands. None of them were too cold or too hurried to wish the others a merry Christmas! It seemed warmer outside than it was in Scrooge's office.

You didn't put more coal on the fire, did you Cratchit?

No, sir.

Good! And keep your eye off that clock, too!

A little later, as Scrooge sat at his desk, counting coins, a young man appeared in the doorway. It was his nephew, Fred.

Will this day never end? There's so much I have to do tonight!

A merry Christmas, Uncle!

Bah! Humbug!

But I know that Christmas is the only day of the year when people truly open their hearts to each other with kindness and love. Though Christmas has never put a penny in my pocket, I believe it has done me good! So I say God bless it!

Another sound from you, Cratchit, and you'll keep your Christmas by losing your job!

Don't be angry, Uncle. Come and have Christmas dinner with us tomorrow.

I will not! Christmas is a lot of humbug! Goodbye!

Goodbye, Uncle, and a happy holiday to you anyway!

As the nephew left, two gentlemen came into Scrooge's office.

We are collecting money for the poor, sir. Those with no homes and little food could use some extra cheer on Christmas!

I don't make merry myself at Christmas, sir, and I can't afford to make lazy people merry! Why not send the poor to the debtor's prisons where they belong!

Many people would rather die than go there!

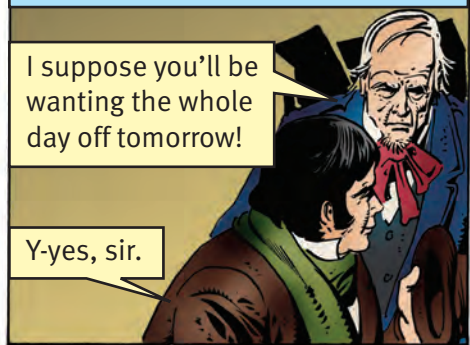

If they would rather die, then let them do so. I say there are too many people in the world as it is!

A merry Christmas to you anyway, sir!

Since there was nothing more they could say, the two gentlemen left.

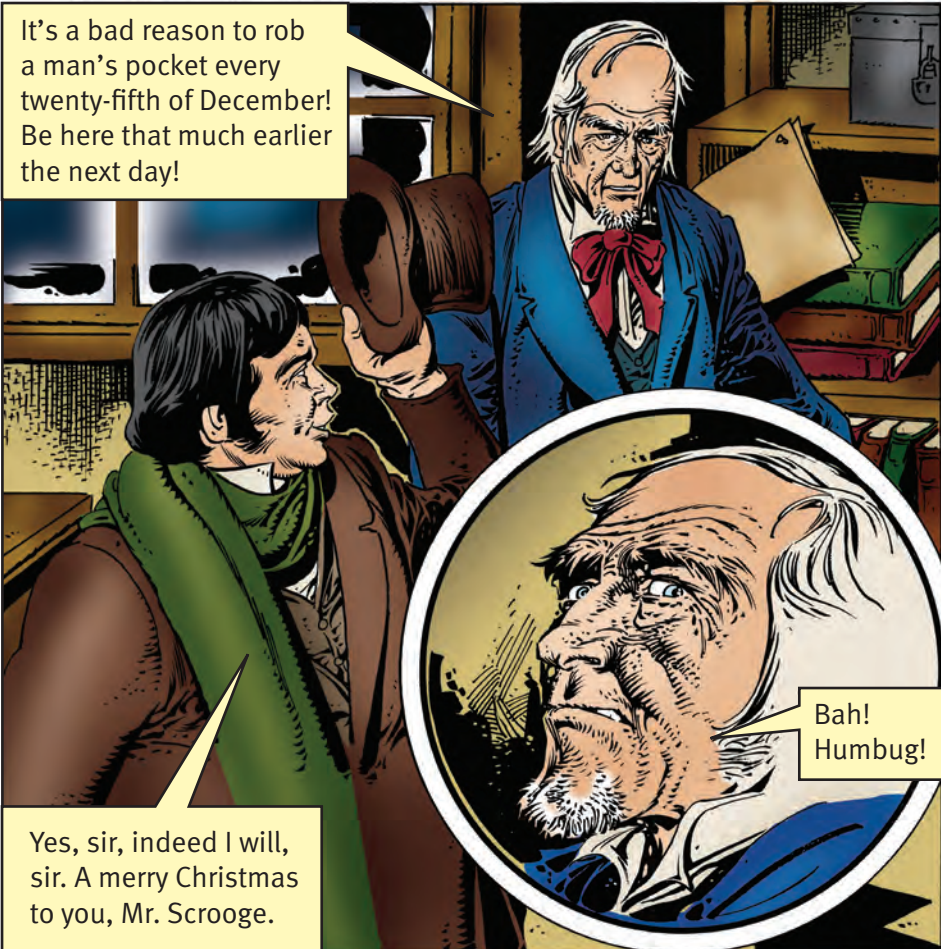

At last it was time for Bob Cratchit to blow out his candle and put on his hat. It was time to close the office.

I suppose you'll be wanting the whole day off tomorrow!

Y-yes, sir.

It's a bad reason to rob a man's pocket every twenty-fifth of December! Be here that much earlier the next day!

Yes, sir, indeed I will, sir. A merry Christmas to you, Mr. Scrooge.

Bah! Humbug!

After a lonely supper at a nearby shop, Scrooge started home. He lived alone in the same rooms that had once been the home of his partner, Jacob Marley.

He made his way through the dark streets until he reached the front door of an old building. As he reached to unlock it, the door knocker before him seemed to glow. Then it changed, and Marley's face appeared in its place!

As Scrooge stood watching, the face faded. Soon only the heavy iron knocker remained.

I couldn't have seen Marley's face. My mind must be playing tricks on me tonight!

Once inside, he lighted a candle, locked the door, and started up the stairs.

It was nothing!

When he reached his rooms, Scrooge put on his robe and nightcap and sat by his fireplace to sip a warm drink.

As he sat there, a small bell in the room began to ring. It started softly, then grew louder and louder. Other bells in the house began to ring as well.

Suddenly the bells stopped, and a new sound began.

But he had heard the clanking of chains! They were coming up the stairs and toward his room!

Through the heavy doors and into the sitting room came the sound. There, in the light thrown by the fire, Scrooge could see the ghost of Jacob Marley.

