H. G. Wells

Herbert George Wells, an English novelist, historian, journalist, and author of science fiction stories, was born in 1866. His father was a shopkeeper, and his mother worked occasionally as a housekeeper. After completing his early formal schooling, Wells worked as a teacher. He later received a scholarship to study at a school with a special focus on the sciences.

His training as a scientist is shown in his imaginative science fiction stories. Wells described trips in airplanes and submarines when such modes of transportation had not yet been invented. The Time Machine describes a trip into the future, and The War of the Worlds is an account of an invasion from Mars. Several of his science fiction works have been the basis of popular movies.

Though he is best-known for his science fiction stories, Wells wrote a variety of other works. He was a strong believer in education and wrote three lengthy books in which he tried to bring important ideas in history and science to the general public. His numerous books, articles, and essays also show his bold support of social change.

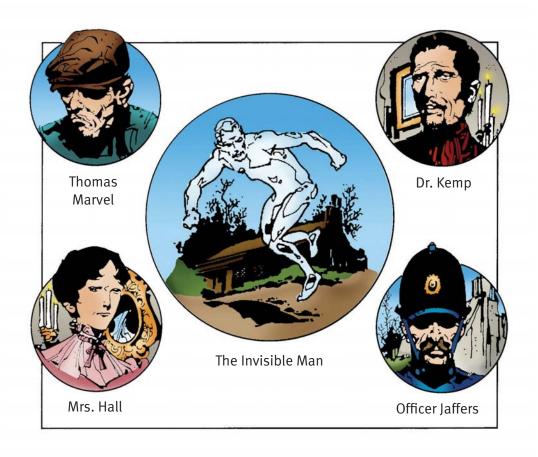

H. G. Wells died in 1946.

The Invisible Man

Would an Invisible Man rule the world? Could he steal great wealth as an unseen thief? Kill people who stood in his way? Scare the countryside and make people all obey him? That's what the young scientist, Griffin thought—until he found that being invisible caused great troubles and kept him from his evil wishes. His terrible actions only made the whole world his enemy, until he was hunted down like a mad dog.

Sir, are you bleeding? Heavens! Your coat sleeve—it has no hand at the end!

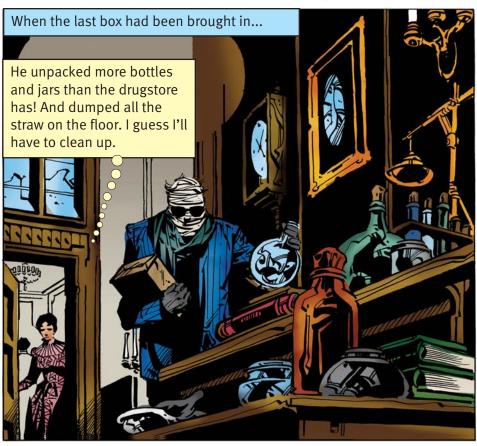

Get out! I'm not hurt. Just have the rest of my bags brought in. Do you hear?

There! New pants and a glove and every inch of my body is covered again. Darn that dog! He nearly gave away my secret.

In the following days, the sound of bottles smashing and books being thrown about often came from the stranger's room....

What a bad temper he has!

I can't go on! It may take me all my life to finish my work! Darn it all!
